Think Irma Curlers Are Tops

(Don Fleming in "Rock Pile" Edmonton Journal, March 1)

When it comes to handing out plugs for small-town hospitality, Tommy Magee desires to wade right in with an armful of bouquets for the curling set of Irma.

This little town of 350 put on quite a show for an invading quartette from the Edmonton Club last week-end.

"We couldn't spend a dime," said Magee, and this is quite a deal for a game that was originated with the Scottish.

For a start Frank Drewicki put the boys (Connie, L'Heureux, Herb Coxford, Magee and Jim Chapman) up in his brand new, fully modern hotel. Then fellows like Ed Sharkey, the town constable, Larry Mejer, who runs a locker plant, and Ross McFarland, operator of the general store, took turns in putting on spreads at their respective homes. For this, of course, the Irma wives rate tops marks too.

Irma has a club of 21 men's rinks and 6 women's. There are two sheets of ice, and in the matter of immediate improvements, they've been debating between adding another sheet or buying matched rocks. For now, they've settled on a third sheet for their bonspiel required from Monday to Monday. It was run in the same week as the Edmonton bonspiel, which speaks well for their popularity, considering the size of the entry—32.

The Irma boys, incidentally are concerned with getting a reciprocal deal with Wainwright. They sent 10 rinks to the Wainwrightspiel but didn't get a single entry in return.

The Edmonton gang had high praise for the ice conditions, credit for which goes to Gus Prosser and Carl Anquist. It's really incidental that the Edmontonians squeezed out victories in two games, one on an extra end. One rink they played was composed of Meier, Vic Torrance, Ed Sharkey and Frank Drewicki, and the other, Ross McFarland, Cliff Jones, Si Symington and Ed Sharkey.

Farm Research

THE PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS of agricultural research have long been appreciated by Canadian farmers and there has been growing realization of its value in solving many of the problems connected with the operation of the farm. Work carried on by research scientists at universities, government experimental farms, the National Research Council and other organizations have contributed much towards the improvement of crops, livestock, farm machinery and many other phases of agricultural production. Although this work has been going on for many years, there are an unlimited number of problems yet to be solved and scientists are continually adding to the store of knowledge which helps the farmer in his work.

Plan Tried In Alberta

This subject was discussed at a recent conference of experimental farm heads, held in Ottawa, and Mr. H. H. Hannam, president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture suggested that there should be a closer working relationship between government experimental stations and farmer's associations. Reference was made to the committee established last year by the Alberta Federation of Agriculture to work with the Lacombe Experimental Farm in Alberta. More sub-committees, Mr. Hannam suggested, would serve as a two-way link between research workers and farmers. Through them, farmers would be better able to make their problems known to the experimental farm staff, and this would benefit the research workers as well as the farmers.

Closer Tie Is Suggested

Cordial relations have always existed between the scientists and the farmers, Mr. Hannam said, but he suggested that farmer's organizations throughout the country would welcome a closer working relationship between the two groups. Agricultural research is essentially the application of science to the problems of the farm and undoubtedly an effective link between the farm and the laboratory would be desirable. The formation of committees from the membership of farm organizations would be one means of bringing this about. The staff of experimental stations could also assist through making themselves acquainted with the problems of the farmers in the surrounding communities. Any steps which will increase the contributions which research is making to Canadian agriculture will be welcomed not only by the scientists and the farmers, but also by the general public, which ultimately shares in the benefits.

ODDITIES In The News

Three-thousand-year-old safety pins, which still fasten, and a number of swords and pots were found in graves of the Illyrian era excavated at Loretta in the Burgenland Province of Austria.

A penny stamp found by a 13-year-old boy was sold for $55 at an auction at London. The stamp became valuable because some postmen years ago had used his own printing system to fix a number of under-stamped envelopes.

Cats are taught to drive cars in Carlin, Nev. When School Superintendent Herbert Chiara stepped on the starter of his car, the resulting fuss startled the neighborhood. Chiara peered cautiously under the hood. As he did, a black cat—noisy, battered and angry—jumped out and fled at top speed. The car had to be towed to a garage for repairs to its fan.

Graham Fry, 17, of Bristol, is known locally as "Cupid". He tossed a jar containing his address into a canal and months later it was found in Wales by May Holt, 17. Now she's honeymooning with Graham's 21-year-old brother.

An inscription on the front page of a novel sold in Nottingham, England, read "you will find the reading of this book rewarding." It was: Somebody had left a $5 note tucked in the pages.

URGES LICENSING OF SOCIAL WORKERS TO PROTECT PUBLIC
VANCOUVER—Licensing of social workers "to protect the public against quacks," has been urged by Joy Malnes, national secretary of the Canadian Association of Social Workers.

She said the plan is being studied in association chapters in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Quebec. It was hoped that registered workers will be able to move from province to province, although licensing will probably be on the provincial level.

Funny and Otherwise

A doctor said to his daughter: "Did you tell the young man that I think he's no good?"
"Yes," replied, "but he said it wasn't the first wrong diagnosis you'd made."

A girl who was in love with a jockey had persuaded her mother to see her fiance ride in a race. The mother took up her position near the rails, and when the horses flashed past and disappeared she snapped her mouth like a clam.

"You ought not to marry that fellow," she said, acidly. "I dislike a boor. I told him to look out for me, and when he passed he never even raised his cap."

A youthful reporter turned up at the office, being sent to write up a fashionable wedding. "Well," snapped the news editor, "where's your copy?"

"Oh! I didn't bother to do it," said the young man. "You see, the bridegroom didn't turn up."

"I'm Mr. Brown's wife," said a brute, looking herself to a blonde at a party.

"I'm his secretary," said the blonde.

"Oh, said the brunette, arching her eyebrows slightly. "You're young."

A cavalry recruit was at his first riding practice.

"I don't like the look of this horse's head," he complained.

"Don't worry, you'll soon get over that," the instructor replied.

"Your brother studied art, didn't he?"

"Yes, he did."

"Is he a finished artist?"

"You bet. The critics finished him yesterday when they wrote up his exhibition."

The big-game hunter was showing his trophies to a guest. He pointed proudly to the wonderful collection of heads around the wall and the tiger skins on the floor.

"Very interesting," muttered the guest, peering at them through his spectacles. "Perhaps you'll drop in some evening and see my butterflies."

Mrs. Johnson: Well, now that you've met my daughter, which side of the family tree do you think she resembles?

Mrs. Backster: Well, really now, it's true she's not a very pretty child, but I'd hardly say she looks like the side of a tree.

Cardston, Alta., Looks For Big Year In Oil, Gas Development

LETHBRIDGE, Alta. — Cardston, settled by Mormon immigrants under Charles Ora Card, venerable churchman and colonizer from Utah, figures this is going to be its big year in oil and gas development. To the east and south of the foothills town, with its million dollar Great White Temple, are the Spring Coulees and Del Bonita fields; to the north the Blood Indian Reserve, scene of important exploratory oil operations, and to the northwest, the lush Pincher Creek wet gas field.

"We're sitting pretty," said Joseph Y. Card, son of the town's founder, recently as he reviewed the oil prospects in that corner of oil-booming Alberta. Mr. Card is a director of Chief Mountain Oils, which has important acreage interests in the area.

He recalled that a Cardston man, "Old Man Bill Aldridge, was one of the discoverers of oil in Alberta back in 1897. And thereby hangs a tale going the rounds wherever oil men gather in the province.

Aldridge and his family moved to Waterton Lakes National Park, then the Kootenai Lakes and little more than a wilderness. They crossed what became known later as Aldridge Bay after "Old Bill," in the Middle Lake.

Now mountaineer Bill had heard from the Indians there was oil in the mountains west of Cardston, so he and his 13-year-old son, Oliver, now living in Cardston, although his dad has been dead many years, set out to find it.

They took their bedding, proverbial prospector's frying pan and coffee pot and tramped through the thick timber. One noon camp the old settler sent his boy to the creek—now Cameron Creek—for a pail of water, while Bill built a fire.

Soon after, Oliver shouted back to his dad:

"Dad, come down here quick and see this black water!"

"Old Bill" trudged down to the creek, as excited as the boy, and seeing the "black water" on the edge of the creek, felt it, tasted it and yelled:

GARDEN NOTES

Planning A Garden Can Be Lots Of Fun

Gardening Indoors

It's possible to build a garage or even a house without a plan but it is hardly to be recommended. The same applies to a garden, though the planning is much more simple and it is a lot of fun, too. In fact with a pencil, a bit of paper and a seed catalogue one can put in a very pleasant evening while waiting for soil and weather to warm up out of doors.

Vegetable Planning

No elaborate plans are required unless one is going to do things on a big and lavish scale. For the vegetable plot, indeed it is just a matter of simple straight lines and a little knowledge of the size the various kinds will grow and when it is safe to plant them. Where space is very limited one can get a great deal more by interplanting short season things like lettuce, radish, spinach, etc., with say carrots, beets, beans. The latter will take much longer to mature and will require full space after the quick growers have been harvested.

Another space saving trick is to train vines like cucumbers, melons and squash along boundary fences or paths. Also that is a good place to grow tall things such as stalked tomatoes and corn.

In the very small urban plot one should concentrate on those vegetables that take up the least room for the number of meals produced. Things like corn, potatoes, peas and squash, for instance require quite a lot of space. On the other hand it is positively amazing the quantities of beans, carrots, beets, lettuce, radish that one can harvest from a patch of ground no more than 10 feet each way.

Flowers and Lawns

For flower gardens and especially the ground about the house, authorities generally advise an informal layout. This means a generous allowance for a central lawn, and round this are arranged clumps of shrubbery, trees and flowers. The beginner is warned to steer clear of stiff rows for flowers, though along walks, fences and house lines the flower garden or shrubbery will have to follow more or less regularly. But planting in clumps is the best practice; even the tiny edging flowers along the front of the garden. The same holds true of the medium and larger flowers, both annual and perennial, and the lower shrubs.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY—

CROSS-PURPOSE

Two People Trying To Stop Each Other From Doing The Same Thing. By MAUDE NORMAN

ROBERT sat looking at his wife. How could she sit there so quietly, head bent above her sewing, knowing she had the means of putting Uncle Ben to sleep—he shrank from the word—somewhere about the house?

She gave an exclamation and looked at her finger, where the needle had pricked it. "I hate blood," she quavered, putting the injured digit to her mouth. "It's so—"

"Most women hate the sight of blood," Robert answered, watching her closely. "That's why they choose a different way of getting rid of someone who stands in their way. Women generally use poison."

The fair head bent lower, she began to rip out stitches.

"Is there anything you would like to tell me, Jeanne?" he asked gently. "Anything to tell you?" she echoed. "Of course not. Have you anything to tell me?"

"What would I have to tell?" he countered.

"That you had seen Mr. Ralston about that job as I asked you."

He moved restlessly. "I intended to, but I knew Uncle Ben would be angry and I didn't want to excite him."

"Uncle Ben?" Jeanne folded her work with shaking hands. "Of course you mustn't offend Uncle Ben. Ever since we've been married, everything has been Uncle Ben. We came here to live because he wanted us. You couldn't get a job because Uncle Ben wanted you near to jump when he spoke. In return for this devotion, Uncle Ben will leave you his money when he dies. That is, if you're a good boy and don't displease him. Well," her voice rose—"I'm sick of catering to his whims and I'm sick—"

"I suppose you're sick of me?" Robert cut in.

"I'm sick of your spineless attitude," she cried. "I was considered a lucky girl when I married you. The heir of rich, old Benjamin Dobbs. Rich and good-looking, what more could any girl ask? And what did I really marry? A weakling! If you haven't enough backbone to end it, I have."

"Did you know a bottle of sleeping pills was missing from the doctor's bag?" she asked.

Jeanne's body tensed. "So I heard. How does he know but what they weren't put in his bag?"

"I asked him that, but he said his office girl was always careful, filling his bag. He missed them after he had been up to see Uncle. He asked me if we had seen anyone around his bag. I said no, naturally."

"Naturally," Jeanne repeated. "Why did he have to leave his bag where anyone could get at it? If anything happens, he's to blame, putting temptation in a person's way—" Sobbing, she ran from the room.

Robert wiped his face with a trembling hand. His suspicions were confirmed, and he was to blame. Poor, pretty Jeanne. He must find the pills and destroy them, without letting her know he was aware of her plan.

He searched everywhere. Had Jeanne kept changing the hiding place? He knew he didn't imagine the thingy look on her face. Then he found her in the solarium, digging around the flowers.

"You'll get your hands dirty," he said, quietly.

She swung around with a startled cry. "The earth around the flowers needed loosening," she began lamely, then stopped. "Robert," she found it difficult to continue, "whatever happens, I want you to know I love you and always will. I didn't mean what I said."

A lump caught in Robert's throat. She was doing this for him. "I love you too," he said huskily—"For the sake of our love, give me the pills."

"Give you the pills," she gasped. "Why—"

The phone rang, Robert answered. He turned back. "It was the doctor," he stammered. "The pills weren't in his bag after all. His regular girl was ill, the substitute forgot to put them in. I thought you had taken them, to give to Uncle Ben."

"And I thought you had," Jeanne collapsed in his arms. "I was trying to find them before you could give them to him. What fools we've been."

"I've been a fool for years," Robert stroked her hair. "But that's ended. We'll get a place of our own. It's only one room. Uncle Ben can do as he pleases with his money. From now on, I earn my own."

Alexanders Loved Canada

LORD ALEXANDER

HALIFAX.—The Alexanders, a wonderful English family who loved Canada and were loved in return, are back in England.

Viscount Alexander returned to the big job as defence minister as the most popular and understanding governor-general in Canada's history.

Candlishes admired his reserved but open manner, the way he did things, and perhaps most of all, the wholesome, solid scene that surrounded his family life. Here, they said, was a man who likes Canadians.

He skied on the Gattineau country's gentle slopes, painted Canadian scenes, sloshed about Winnipeg's flood waters, shipped down a brass fire station pole and won his air force wings.

In his farewell address he said that he and his family had spent the happiest six years of their life among the Canadian people. "For us, Canada has become our second home, and we shall always look upon it as such."

The affection and friendship of the Canadian people is one of my most treasured possessions, and I can never express in adequate terms my gratitude to you for all you have given me and my family during the six years we have lived in Canada."

He praised the choice of Canadian-born Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey as his successor as governor-general. Although he did not refer to him directly he said, "I am glad that it is to someone who is not only a personal friend of mine but one who is a distinguished and well-known man, who has all the attributes and qualifications which will make him a worthy representative of our Queen."

"English John" Has Lived With Indians For Past 50 Years

Although a White Man He Speaks the Language and Even Thinks Like an Indian

BISSETT, Man.—People who are "snicky about their dirt should try the fare of "English John", a trapper on the fringe of this rock-girt mining settlement, 100 miles northeast of Winnipeg. English John has lived with the Indians of Manitoba as one of them since he was a small boy. He speaks the language better than most natives.

He even thinks like an Indian. In he was sent to Canada and arrived at a farm at Stonewall, Man. After a dish-washing job in Winnipeg, further travels in the United States; at the age of 12, he returned to Manitogagan, Man., where he was adopted by a Saulteaux Indian.

Barren Land Caribou Start Northern Trek

CHURCHILL, Man.—Barren Land caribou have started to migrate north after spending the winter south of Churchill.

The caribou were reported moving in a mass from mile 149 to mile 461 on the Hudson Bay railway. Herds estimated at 2,000 already have crossed the Churchill river west of here.

This year's trek is about two weeks earlier than usual. "Trappers say the caribou started now only to cross the lakes and rivers while still frozen. The movement this year apparently is slightly west of last year's which hung close to the coast and went inland from Churchill.

English John has no intention of leaving his Indian friends. But he admits he gets tired of trapping sometimes and takes the odd trip out—always to Bissett.

He says that at one time, when he first came to Manitoba, he spent 36 years in the bush with Indians without seeing a white man.

"When I first saw my own kind again I was so shy of them I couldn't even look them in the eye."

His real name is John Henry Thomas but he is so well known by the "English John" handle that banks in Bissett cash cheques made out to him under that name.

His unusual story starts somewhere in Cornwall, England. His father, a doctor, died when John was quite young and the boy ran away from home. Two years later, at the age of 10,

Cattle Disease Symptoms Listed

REGINA—Federal veterinary officials Saturday said there are seven major symptoms of foot-and-mouth disease:

1. The animal will go off its feed.
2. Its temperature will rise.
3. It will froth from the mouth and later, in a day or two, may begin slobbering white, foamy matter.
4. Blisters will form on the tongue, sometimes as large as two inches in diameter. The blisters contain a highly infectious yellowish fluid. Dairy cattle also may develop blisters on the teats and udder and all animals may get them along the flesh band above the hoof.
5. The skin may begin to drop off these blistered areas.
6. The animals may develop lameness and the hoof may drop off.
7. As the animal goes off its feed, it will begin to lose weight.

They said that none of the advanced symptoms, such as hooves dropping off have occurred in the Saskatchewan outbreak.
